

CHAPTER XN.

The Forged Passport. For obvious reasons, I cannot describe the man to whom I applied for the passport nor the house in which he fived. While, in view of what subsequently happened, I would not be very much concerned if he got into trouble for having dealt with me, I realize that the hardships he had endured in common with the other inhabitants of that conquered city may possibly have distorted his idea of right and justice, and I shall not deliberately bring further disaster on him by revealing his identity. This man-we will call him Huyliger because that is as unlike his name as it is mine-was very kind to me on that memorable night when I aroused him from his sleep and in a few words of explanation told him of my plight.

He invited me inside, prepared some food for me and, putting on a dressing gown, came and sat by me while I ate listening with the greatest interest to the short account of my adven-

He could speak English fluently, and he interrupted me several times to express his sympathy for the sufferings I had endured.

"O'Brien," he said, after I had constuded my story, "I am going to help you. It may take several days-perhaps as long as two weeks-but eventusily we will provide the means to enable you to get to Holland."

I thanked him a thousand times and told him that I didn't know how I could possibly repay him.

"Don't think of that," he replied; "the satisfaction of knowing that I have aided in placing one more victim of the Huns beyond their power to harm will more than repay me for all the risk I shall run in helping you. You'd better turn in now, O'Brien, and in the morning I'll tell you what I plan

As I removed my clothes and noticed that my knees were still swollen to twice their normal size, that my left ankle was black and blue from the wrench I had given it when I jumped from the train and that my ribs showed I had been through. As a matter of fact, I could not have weighed more than one hundred and fifty pounds at that time, whereas I had tipped the scales at one hundred and ninety when I was with my squadron in France.

I lost no time in getting into bed and still less in getting to sleep. don't know what I dreamed of that night, but I had plenty of time to go through the experiences of my whole itte, for when I was aroused by a knock on the door and Huyliger entered in response to my invitation to enter, he told me that it was nearly soon! I had slept for almost twelve

I cannot say that the thought did not run through my head that perhaps after all I was living in a fool's paradise, and that when Huyliger reappeared it would be with a couple of German soldiers behind him, but I dismissed such misgivings summarily, reallsing that I was doing Huyliger an injustice to let such things enter my bead even for an instant. I had no right to doubt his sincerity and it would do me no good to entertain such suspicions. If he was going to prove trencherous to me, I was powerless any way to cope with him.

In a few moments my host reappeared with a tray containing my breakfast. I don't suppose I shall ever corget that meal. It consisted of a cap of caffee real coffee, not the kind Lhad had at Courtral-several slices of bread, some hot potatoes and a dish of acrambled eggs.

Bvery mouthful of that meal tasted tike angel-food to me and Huyliger out on the edge of the bed and watched me enjoying it, at the same time out fining the plans he had made for my

In brief, the scheme was to concea me in a convent until conditions were ripe for me to make my way to the border. In the meanwhile I was to be dressed in the garb of a priest, and when the time came for me to leave the city I was to pretend that I was a Spanish sailor, because I could speak a little Spanish, which I had picked us on the coast. To attempt to play the part of a Belgian would become increasingly difficult, he pointed out, and would bring inevitable disaster in the event that I was called upon to speak.

Huyliger said I would be given sufelent money to bribe the German guards at the Dutch frontier, and he sesured me that everything would work out according to schedule.

"Yours is not the first case, O'Brien, we have handled successfully," he dedared. "Only three weeks ago I heard from an English merchant who had sary for me to clude searchers. secaped from a German detention camp and came to me for assistance and whom I had been able to get through the lines. His message telling me of his safe arrival in Rotterdam came to me in an indirect way, of course, but the fact that the plans we had made carried through without mishap makes me feel that we ought to be able to do as much for you."

I told Huyliger I was ready to follow his instructions and would do anything he suggested.

"I want to rejoin my squadron as soon as I possibly can," I told him, "but I realize that it will take a certin length of time for you to make the necessary arrangements, and I will be as patient as I can."

The first thing to do, Huyliger told me, was to prepare a passport. He had a blank one and it was a comparatively simple matter to fill in the spaces, using a genuine passport which Huyliger possessed as a sample of the handwriting of the passport clerk. My occupation was entered as that of a sailor. My birthplace we gave as Spain, and we put my age at thirty. As a matter of fact, at that time I could easily have passed for thirtyfive, but we figured that with proper food and a decent place to sleep at night, I could soon regain my normal appearance, and the passport would have to serve me, perhaps, for several weeks to come.

Filling in the blank spaces on the passport was, as I have said, a comparatively easy matter, but that did not begin to fill the bill. Every genuine passport bore an official rubber stamp, something like an elaborate postmark, and I was at a loss to know how to get over that difficulty.

Fortunately, however, Huyliger had half of a rubber stamp which had evidently been thrown away by the Germans, and he planned to construct the other half out of the cork from a wine bottle. He was very skillful with a penknife, and although he spotlt a score or more of corks before he succeeded in getting anything like the result he was after, the finished article was far better than our most sanguine expectations. Indeed, after we had pared it over here and there, and removed whatever imperfections our repeated test disclosed, we had a stamp which made an impression so closely resembling the original that without a magnifying glass, we were sure, it would have been impossible to tell that it was a counterfelt.

Huyliger procured a camera and took a photograph of me to paste on the passport in the place provided for that purpose, and we then had a passport which was entirely satisfactory to both of us and would, we hoped, prove equally so to our friends the

It had taken two days to fix up the passport. In the meanwhile Huyliger informed me that he had changed his plans about the convent and that instead he would take me to an empty house, where I could remain in safety until he told me it was advisable for me to proceed to the frontier.

This was quite agreeable to me, as I had had misgivings as to the kind of a priest I would make and it seemed to me to be safer to remain aloof from everyone in a deserted house than to have to mingle with people or come in contact with them, even with the best

That night I accompanied Huyliger to a fashionable section of the city. where the house in which I was to be concealed was located.

This house turned out to be a fourstory structure of brick. Huyliger told me that it had been occupied by a wealthy Belgian before the war, but since 1914 it had been uninhabited save for the occasional habitation of some refugee whom Huyliger was befriend-

Huyliger had a key and let me in but he did not enter the house with me, stating that he would visit me in the morning.

I explored the place from top to bottom as well as I could without lights. The house was elaborately furnished, but, of course, the dust lay a quarter of an inch thick everywhere. It was a large house, containing some twenty rooms. There were two rooms in the basement four on the first floor, four on the second five on the third and five come I was to have plenty of opportunity to familiarize myself with the contents of that house but at that time I did not know it and I was curious enough to want to know just what the house contained.

Down in the basement there was a huge pantry but it was absolutely bare, except of dust and dirt. A door which evidently led to a sub-basement attracted my attention and I thought it might be a good idea to know just where it led to in case it became neces-

In that cellar I found case after case of choice wine-Huyliger subsequently told me that there were 1,800 bottles of it! I was so happy at the turn my affairs had taken and in the rosy prospects which I now entertained that I was half inclined to indulge in a little celebration then and there. On second thought, however, I remembered the old warning of the folly of shouting before you are well out of the woods, and I decided that it would be just as well to postpone the festivities for a while and go to bed instead.

In such an elaborately furnished house I had naturally conjured up ideas of a wonderfully large bed, with thick bair mattress, downy quilts and big soft pillows. Indeed, I debated for a while which particular bedroom I should honor with my presence that night. Judge of my disappointment, therefore, when after visiting bedroom after bedroom, I discovered that there wasn't a bed in any one of them that was in a condition to sleep in. All the mattresses had been removed and the rooms were absolutely bare of everything in the way of wool, silk or cotton fabrics. The Germans had apparently swept the house clean.

There was nothing to do, therefore, but to make myself as comfortable as I could on the floor, but as I had grown accustomed by this time to sleeping under far less comfortable conditions, I swallowed my disappointment as cheerfully as I could and lay down for the night.

In the morning Huyliger appeared and brought me some breakfast, and after I had eaten it be asked me what connections I had in France or England from whom I could obtain

I told him that I banked at Cox & Co., London, and that if he needed any money I would do anything I could to get it for him, although I did not know just how such things could be arranged.

"Don't worry about that, O'Brien," he replied. "We'll find a way of getting it all right. What I want to know is how far you are prepared to go to compensate me for the risks I am rendering you!"

The change in the man's attitude stunned me. I could hardly believe my

"Of course I shall pay you as well as I can for what you have done, Huyliger," I replied, trying to conceal as far as possible the disappointment his demand had occasioned me, "but don't you think that this is hardly the proper time or occasion to talk of compensation? All I have on me, as you know, is a few hundred francs, and that, of course, you are welcome to, and when I get back, if I ever do, I shall not easily forget that kindness you have shown me. I am sure you need have no concern about my showing my gratitude in a substantial way."

"That's all right, O'Brien," he insisted, looking at me in a knowing sort of way; "you may take care of me afterwards, and then again you may not. I'm not satisfied to wait. I want to be taken care of now!"

of compensation? How can I arrange to get it to you? I am willing to do anything that is reasonable."

"I want - pounds," he replied, and he named a figure that staggered me. If I had been Lord Kitchener instead of just an ordinary lieutennut in the R. F. C., he would hardly have asked a larger sum. Perhaps be thought I was.

"Well, my dear man," I said smilingly, thinking that perhaps he was joking, "you don't really mean that, do you?"

"I certainly do, O'Brien, and what is more," he threatened, "I intend to get Outlining the Plans He Had Made for My Escape.

every cent I have asked, and you ar going to help me get it."

He pulled out an order calling for the payment to him of the amount he on the top. In the days that were to had mentioned and demanded that I

I waved it aside.

"Huyliger," I said, "you have helped me out so far and perhaps you have of placing me in a convent disguised the power to help me further. I appreclate what you have done for me, although now, I think, I see what your motive was, but I certainly don't intend to be blackmailed and I tell you-right now that I won't stand for it." "Very well," he said, "It is just as you say, but before you make up your mind so obstinately I would advise you to think it over. I'll be back this evaning."

My first impulse, after the man had turn in my affairs, when the front door | right at the start, but I listened pacft, was to get out of that house just as soon as I could. I had the passport he had prepared for me, and I figured that even without further help I could now get to the border without very much difficulty, and when I got there would have to use my own ingenuity

o get through. It was evident, however, that Huyger still had an idea that I might hange my mind with regard to the ayment he had demanded, and I deided that it would be foolish to do anything until he paid me a second visit.

At the beginning of my dealings with Huyliger I had turned over to him ome pictures, papers, and other things that I had on me when I entered his house, including my identification disk, and I was rather afraid that he might refuse to return them to me.

All day long I remained in the house ithout a particle of food other than he breakfast Huyliger had brought to me. From the windows I could see plenty to interest me and help pass the lime away, but of my experiences while in that house I shall tell in detail later on, confining my attention now to a narrative of my dealing with Huyliger.

That night he appeared as he had promised.

"Well, O'Brien," he asked, as he entered the room where I was awaiting him, "what do you say? Will you sign the order or not?"

It had occurred to me during the day that the amount demanded was so fabulous that I might have signed the order without any danger of its ever being paid, but the idea of this man, who had claimed to be befriending me, endeavoring to make capital out of my plight galled me so that I was determined not to give it to him whether I could do so in safety or not.

"No, Huyliger," I replied, "I have decided to get along as best I can without any further assistance from you. I shall see that you are reasonably paid for what you have done, but I will not accept any further assistance from you at any price, and what is more I want you to return to me at once all the photographs and other papers and belongings of mine which I turned over to you a day or two

"I'm sorry about that, O'Brien," he retorted, with a show of apparent sincerity, "but that is something I cannot

"If you don't give me back those papers at once," I replied hotly, "I will take steps to get them, and d-d quick too!"

"I don't know just what you could do, O'Brien," he declared coolly, "but as a matter of fact the papers and pictures you refer to are out of the country. I could not get them back to you if I wanted to."

Something told me the man was

"See here, Huyliger!" I threatened, advancing towards him, putting my hand on his shoulder and looking him straight in the eye, "I want those papers and I want them here before "Well, what do you want me to do? midnight to-night. If I don't get them How much do you expect in the way I shall sleep in this place just once more and then, at 8 o'clock to-morrow morning, I shall go to the German authorities, give myself up, show them the passport that you fixed for me, tell them how I got it, and explain everything."

Huyliger paled. We had no lights in the house, but we were standing near a landing at the time and the moonlight was streaming through a stained-glass window.

The Belgian turned on his heel and started to go down the stairs.

"Mind you," I called after him, "I shall wait for you till the city clock strikes twelve, and if you don't show up with those papers by that time, the next time you will see me is when you confront me before the German authorities. I am a desperate man, Huyliger, and I mean every word I say."

He let himself out of the door and I or send me something to eat while I sat on the top stair and wondered just remained in the house. what he would do. Would he try to steal a march on me and get in a first word to the authorities so that my as best you can. When I brought you story would be discredited when I put it to them?

Of course, my threat to give myself up to the Huns was a pure bluff. While I had no desire to lose the papers which Huyliger had and which included the map and the last resting place of my poor chum Raney, I certainly had no intention of cutting off my nose to spite my face by-surrendering to the Germans. I would have been shot, as sure as fate, for after all I had been able to observe behind the German lines I would be regarded as a spy and treated as such.

At the same time I thought I detected a yellow streak in Huyliger, and I figured that he would not want to take the risk of my carrying out my threat even though he believed there was but a small chance of my doing so. If I did, he would undoubtedly share my fate, and the pictures and papers he had of mine were really of no use to him, and I have never been able to ascertain why it was he wished to retain then unless they contained some thing-some information about mewhich accounted for his complete change of attitude towards me in the first place, and he wanted the papers as evidence to account to his supe riors for his conduct towards me. When he first told me that the plan as a priest had been abandoned he explained it by saying that the cardinal had issued orders to the priests to help no more fugitives, and I have since wondered whether there was anything in my papers which had turned him against me and led him to forsake me after all be had promised to do for me. For perhaps two hours I sat on that staircase musing about the peculiar opened and Huyliger ascended the

"I have brought you such of your belongings as I still had, O'Brien," he said softly. "The rest, as I told you, I cannot give you. They are no longer in my possession."

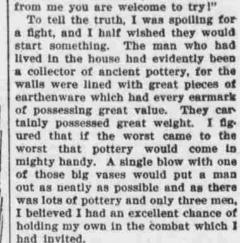

I looked through the little bunch he handed me. It included my identification disk, most of the papers I valued, and perhaps half of the photo-

"I don't know what your object is in retaining the rest of my pictures, Huyliger," I replied, "but as a matter of fact, the ones that are missing were only of sentimental value to me and you are welcome to them. We'll call it a beat."

I don't know whether he understood the idiom, but he sat down on the stairs just below me and cogitated for a few moments.

"O'Brien," he started finally, "I'm sorry things have gone the way they have. I feel sorry for you and I would really like to help you. I don't suppose you will believe me, but the matter of the order which which I asked you to sign was not of my doing. However, we won't go into that. The proposition was made to you and you turned it down, and that's the end of moment that I was determined to sell it. At the same time, I hate to leave my life as dearly as possible. you to your own resources and I am "I have that passport here," I regoing to make one more suggestion plied, "and am going to keep it. If to you for your own good. I have anyou gentlemen think you can take it tiently to what they had to say.

Huyliger's brother.

other chap at this.

"Of course, you will have to return

"I haven't the slightest objection," I replied, "if the new passport is all you

There was considerable hesitation on the part of Huyliger's brother and the

"Why, I don't think that's necessary, at all, Mr. O'Brien," said the former.

"You give us the old passport and we

"It may be fair enough, my friends,"

I retorted, seeing that it was useless to conceal further the fact that I was fully aware of their whole plan and why I had been brought to this house.

"It may be fair enough, my friends," I said, "but you will get the passport that I have here," patting my side and indicating my inside breast pocket,

I suppose the three of them could have made short work of me then and there if they had wanted to go the limit, and no one would ever have been the wiser, but I had gone through so much and I was feeling so mean towards the whole world just at that

"only off my dead body!"

will be very glad to give you the new one for it. Isn't that fair enough?"

claim for it. Will you let me see it?"

to us the passport we gave you before

we can give you the real one," said

I had already picked out in my mind what I was going to use, and I got up, stood with my back to the wall and told them that if they ever figured on getting the passport, then would be their best chance.

Apparently they realized that 1 meant business and they immediately began to expostulate at the attitude 1 was taking.

One of the men spoke excellent English. In fact, he told me that he could speak five languages, and if he could lie in the others as well as I knew he did in my own tongue, he was not only an accomplished linguist, but a most versatile liar into the bargain.

"My dear fellow," said the linguist, it is not that we want to deprive you of the passport. Good heavens! if it will ald you in getting out of the country, other plan to get you into Holland I wish you could have six just like it, and if you will go with me to another But for our own protection, you owe house, I will introduce you to a man it to us to proceed on your journey who I think will be in a position to as best you can without it because as long as you have it in your possession "How many millions of pounds will you jeopardize our lives, too. Don't he want for his trouble " I answered, you think it is fairer that you should risk your own safety rather than place "You can arrange that when you see the lives of three innocent men in danger?" I suspected there was something "That may be as it is, my friends," I retorted, "and I am glad you realize your danger. Keep it in mind, for in case any of you should happen to feel inclined to notify the German authoris ties that I am in this part of the country, think it over before you do so, Remember always that if the Germans get me, they get the passport, too, and if they get the passport your lives won't be worth a damn! When I tell the history of that clever little piece of pasteboard, I will implicate all three of you, and whoever is working with you, and as I am an officer I rather think my word will be taken before yours. Good night!"

The bluff evidently worked, because I was able to get out of the city without molestation from the Germans. I have never seen these men since. I hope I never shall, because I am your breakfast this morning I took afraid I might be tempted to do somecovered by one of the German soldiers thing for which I might otherwise be entering this house with food in my possession, I would not only have paid I do not mean to imply that all Belgians are like this. I had evidently fallen into the hands of a gang who were endeavoring to make capital out out by yourself and buy your food at of the misfortunes of those who were referred to them for help. In all countries there are bad as well as good. when you continue your journey to the and in a country which has suffered so much as poor Belgium it is no wonder if some of the survivors have lest their sense of moral perspective. blame him for not wanting to take any

I know that the average poor peasant in Belgium would divide his scanty rations with a needy fugitive sooner than a wealthy Belgian would dole out a morsel from his comparatively fore and I suppose I shall be able to well-stocked larder. Perhaps the poor do so again. I shall look for you tohave less to lose than the rich if their generosity or charity is discovered by the Huns.

There have been many Belgians shot for helping escaped prisoners and other fugitives, and it is not to be wondered at that they are willing to take as few chances as possible. A man with a family, especially, does not feel justified in helping a stranger when he knows that he and his whole family may be shot or sent to prison for their ducted me to a room on the second pains.

floor, where he introduced me to two Although I suffered much from the men. One, I could readily see by the attitude of Huyliger and his associates, I suppose I ought to hold no grudge against them in view of the unenviable Very briefly they explained to me predicament in which they are in that they had procured another passthemselves. port for me-a genuine one-which would prove far more effective in help ing to get me to the frontier than the We Suppose This Is So. counterfelt one they had manufac-In place of most of our troubles we might easily have much worse ones --I think I saw through their game Albany Journal.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"Your Lives Won't Be Worth a Damn."

fishy about the proposition, but I felt that I could take care of myself and decided to see the thing through. I knew Huyliger would not dare to deliver me to the authorities because of the fact that I had the tell-tale passport, which would be his deathknell as willing to go with him whenever he was ready, and he suggested that we

I pointed out to him that I was entirely without food and asked him

whether he could not arrange to bring

"I'm sorry, O'Brien," he replied, "but I'm afraid you will have to get along a desperate chance. If I had been dis-the penalty myself, but you would have been discovered, too. It is too dangerous a proposition. Why don't you go the stores? That would give you confidence and you'll need plenty of it

There was a good deal of truth in what he said and I really could not chances to help me in view of the rela-

"Very well," I said; "I've gone with-

The next evening he came and I accompanied him to another house not very far from the one in which I had been staying and not unlike it in appearance. It, too, was a substantial dwelling house which had been untenanted since the beginning save perhaps for such occasional visits as Huyliger

Huyliger let himself in and con-resemblance, was his own brother.

and his associates made to ft.

The other was a stranger.

tured for me.

out food for many hours at a time be-

Accordingly I said I would be quite help you."

sarcastically.

him. Will you go?"

well as my own.

border."

tions between us.

morrow evening."

go the next evening.